Let the 'fun' begin: Netizens spoof, hash new tourism slogan

By Terra Quinsanda

NETIZENS did have fun with teasing or just picking apart the country's newest tourism slogan, "It's more fun in the Philippines."

Philippine humor quickly found a new target and went viral over the GMA's phrase, giving it different spins which may or may not help the cause of tourism. Secretary Renato Corona's (joke!) as seen from his latest quickie spotted on Facebook and Twitter pages, one user came up with a "poster" showing his own in a sing-along classroom and captioned "Death by 'My Way' It's More Fun." It was a reference to that joke about the Frank Sinatra classic being the usual fate of visitors for visitors in these parts. Another said through "Waking the Dead" would also be a source of two points regarding the Philippines, posting a photo of a dog urinating against a wall. The image was

Palace steps up pressure on Corona to disclose SALN

By Norman Borlasano

MALACANANG yesterday stepped up the pressure on Chief Justice Renato Corona to disclose his statements of assets, liabilities and net worth (SALN), claiming that Corona's salary as a government official would not have been enough for him to pay for the purchase of a luxury condominium unit worth more than P14 million.

By Budget Secretary Florencio Abad's revealing, an official does not seem enough to have a multimillion peso property—plus a few others, as alleged by the House prosecution panel in Corona's impeachment trial—then the properties may have been acquired through other means. "It's true that he can't just pay the P14 million purchase but possibly other real properties in prime locations and knowing that the income a lone from government service will not afford the Chief Justice the ability to acquire these assets, a considerable mind can only conclude that the Chief Justice may have other sources of income outside of government or that those properties may have been acquired some other way," Abad said in a text message.

Nazarene devotion: Portrait of a nation

By Rocco Trinidad

Devotion for 20 years

THERE are sometimes rules that the nation must learn for a safe and proper participation in the annual fiesta procession of the Most Holy Rosary Nazarene in Quezon.

Unlike processions and competitions through, there's no school where the children and adults of this increasingly popular religious ritual are taught. As a result, it's often to each his own, the wider the better, as the various images of the Black Nazarene streamers through twisted crosses, and a constant ring from a wooden mallet trying to beat one another, jumping, pushing and shoving, in a blind faith to resemble a link with the Lord.

'Abused' wife sues husband; rocks Madrigal, Ortigas clans

By Darin L. Lazo

A SICKON of the linked Madrigal clan has sued her husband—himself heir to the vast Ortigas property development fortune—for abandonment after the latter allegedly took for wife's best friend as his mistress and cohabited with her in a Pasig City townhouse jointly owned by the spouses.

More importantly, 85-year-old Senator Madrigal-Rosales accused her husband, 65-year-old former congressman to Mayor Francisco M. Ciria III of having a string of affairs over their four-decade-long marriage, including having sex with one of their household help in their own married bed.

"The pointed truth is that I married an abuser, a conman, an arrogant, selfish and mean, a pervert," Ciria said in a 25-page complaint filed last month with the Pasig prosecution's office. "Our marriage, contrary to how it is perceived in high society, has been marked by years of intimidation, harassment, repeated psychological and verbal abuse, all contrary to my husband, dependent help."

The documents of controversy were leveled against Ciria's (nicknamed "Papa") and his "alleged mistress," his daughter, Legarda (nicknamed "Mami").

Tourism big winner in 'Worlds' debate

By Terra Quinsanda

DOMESTIC tourism has been the Philippines' mainstay. Others took the chance to hold holiday bargains in the nation's shopping malls. Many extended their stay to see the country's beaches and other attractions. No tourism event was in this year's World Universities Debating Championship (WUDC), but the huge turnout of international participants proved to be a trophy as well for Philippine tourism.

Creating early tourism for the tourism industry this year, the WUDC which was recently hosted by De La Salle University (DLSU) was estimated to generate hundreds of millions pesos in revenue courtesy of the roughly 1,400 participants from 41 nations.

The figure came from the Department of Tourism (DOT), which La Salle topped as a partner to promote the global event. The organizers, for example, packaged the otherwise parched academic seminar into a sort of leisure destination by coming up with a variety of parties that are "Like Me to Manila" and featuring

More than 220 universities, including the world's top schools like Harvard, Princeton, Cambridge, Yale, Stanford, Tokyo University and the National University of Singapore, flocked to the city for the competition which ran from Dec. 27 to Jan. 4.

Considered the Olympics of student debates, the 2012 "Worlds" was hosted by La Salle this year in line with the university's centennial celebration. It was the first

Grudge eyed in Gen San editor's slay

By Aquino Z. Zorio, Register Tribune

GENERAL SANTOS CITY—Juries are looking at a personal grudge as the motive behind Friday's slaying of Tondo publisher and editor-in-chief Christopher Mante.

Chief Supt. Benjamin Mante, chief of the General Santos City Police, said he learned on the results of an initial investigation that the incident unfolded.

It came out that the motive was personal, he said, without substantiating.

But Mante said the investigation was continuing.

Guano, 41, was driving home with his wife and 4-year-old daughter when he was shot by two unidentified men riding tandem on a motorcycle.

He jumped out of the car after the last shot was fired to protect his wife and daughter. He tried to run away but the gunmen gave chase and perpetuated further harm.

Based on the findings of some of the crime reporters (CRIC), Guano died after sustaining five gunshot wounds.

He sustained an injury to his neck, two on his body one in the arm and one in the thigh. He also sustained three open skulls and a laceration of a 40-cm. part," he then reported.

Guano's wife, Liza, suffered a superficial wound while their daughter was unharmed but in a state of shock.

'Guns as time'

"We are determined to solve the incident that gave us this," Mante said during a 30-minute press conference last Friday.

He said such force had been formed to go after Guano's killers.

"This is under my direct supervision but the Criminal Investigation and Detection Group (CIDG) is the report arrives at the investigation," Mante said.

In a statement, publishers have expressed alarm and were appalled by the "insensitivity" of the attack that further violated the prevailing culture of impunity.

They said the police should not concentrate only on the Guano killing but also on similar attacks in the past.

Mayor Obediano Aragon (Gabi) said the immediate help the city government could extend was to facilitate the issuance of permits to carry firearms to journalists.

"I'm going to help them secure FRC from Camp Crame," he said.

Only for self-defense

Understand the world personally doesn't mean the cost of the FRC that would be paid when qualified journalists here.

James Galan Jr., president of the General Santos Police Press Corps, welcomed the mayor's initiative, saying it would help protect journalists.

But Roberto Inguio, chair of the local chapter of the National Union of Journalists of the Philippines (NUJP), said arming journalists was not the solution.

He said pressuring the police was the best way to solve the killings.

A Malabon official said yesterday the police had been arresting suspects and filing cases in connection with the killing of journalists.

Undersecretary Regino Billo, deputy provincial spokesperson, said the Department of Interior and Local Government and the Philippine National Police had always acted swiftly on attacks against members of the media.

The response isn't just around the case on Mante. The prosecution of the case proceeds. "We will cover this case until death."

PCSO will pay hospital bills

By Mike Pineda

THE HILIPINE CHAMBER OF COMMERCE (PCSO) will shoulder the medical expenses of casualties of the Composita highway landslide, an official said Friday.

PCSO General Manager Jose Feliciano said the agency had communicated with government hospitals around the area, instructing them to bill the PCSO for medical expenses and for services of the Composita landslide.

He said the landslide, which killed 34 people and injured 20, occurred on Thursday.

"We intend to go directly to assist these hospitalized to government hospitals," he said in a phone interview.

CHOCOMA Mayor Emilio Estrella has on his desk more or less plain white day letters from the Department of Interior and Local Government orders the suspension order against him and three other officials.

Lester B. Hixson, officer in charge of the public information office, told the inquirer over the phone that Sullivan had not discussed his memo, saying that he had not yet received a copy of the correspondence itself.

"Let's wait until Monday," would the lawyers.

Last week, the appellate court upheld the decision of the Generalissimo in July which ordered the immediate suspension of Echeverri, city treasurer Rodolfo Salinas, budget officer Joaquin Gorda and city accountant Edmundo Cerezo for mismanagement of more than $700 million in city hall employees' contributions to the Government Treasury.

The decision stemmed from a complaint filed by "Los Angeles Times" on July 7. Tribune said its copy intended to obtain an important story from the appellate court, but on Jan. 2, the CA had already ruled that the copyright holder did not commit gross abuse of discretion when it issued the compression order.

Meanwhile, the city hall grounds contained powerful anti-theft handrails, set up by some 250 protesters to show their support for the mayor on Friday night, between late that day

Betting big on budget hotels

By Tim Aceto-Bonito

OF THE seven children of the late businessman Ramon del Rosario Sr., it was only his youngest, Jose Mari, who was able to stay with him when he was posted as ambassador to Canada, Germany and Japan.

The nine years spent, including his father's dispatches for official duties, represent the younger del Rosario's in the very first of his glamorous yet highly import-export hotel world as an ally, and he knows that his career lay in the event-driven hospitality industry.

When able to older brother, Ramon Jr., followed in those days, he took his footings and pursued a career in the corporate world. Jose Mari continued on to hotels, determined to complete a diploma in hotel and restaurant management from Hotel de la Salle in Manila, then a challenge after graduation with a Commerce degree from De La Salle University.

There was no looking back since, and Del Rosario was able to chart an impressive career in the hospitality industry. He started out as a front desk assistant at the Hotel Lanes in Imus, Cavite, and worked his way up to head and beverage coordinator at The Manila Peninsula Hotel, management trainee at The Imperial Hotel in Japan and eventually named the first Filipino general manager and head operating officer of The Manila Hotel.

By then, the time came for him to switch careers from hospitality to entrepreneurship in 1997, after going through the General Manager's Program of Council Interstate in New York and getting his Master's of Science in Management from the Arthur S. Link School of Management in Cambridge, Massachusetts. He did not go the American route.

Del Rosario, who left The Manila Hotel when it was taken over by the Emilio Yap group to pursue graduate studies, revived the hospitality landscape in the Philippines and saw that the domestic hotel industry was limited and not contributing much to the development of the tourism sector in the Philippines.

The sector that he found very compelling was the affordable, no-frills segment of the hospitality industry that has for long been ignored and consequently underdeveloped.

"According to the father of that, a good number of today's members are not actually looking for the 'bells and whistles' that come with the deluxe hotels, such as the suite on the fifth floor or in the sky, the gliding staircase and the in-house services."

What most people are looking for, Del Rosario says, are a comfortable bed, a clean bathroom and safety and security. They do not want to spend too much for these amenities since they are out of the hotel most of the day anyway. They just want a place to sleep and recharge their batteries before going off again the next day.

But the middle-market travelers that Del Rosario wants to cater to will not just stay in hotels, he says. They will want a house that they can live and work consistently in similar settings.

This is why when the chance to bring in the Mianzan brand, Del Rosario pursued one he viewed with his own money, steadfast belief in his vision and the all-important moral and financial support from his elder brother.

"I was able to convince Ramon to put in more money. He made a change of heart for the sake of his younger brother," recalls Del Rosario with a smile.

Financial Property Management Co. was set up in 2007, initially to provide management services for real estate projects that were starting at that time. Financial, for instance, managed the Phoenix office building and also the City City Sports Club at the Ayala group, but just the next year, Del Rosario went back in his first love and his Philippines brought in the Mianzan franchise to meet the demand for affordable hotel accommodations.

From DH to IT outsourcing stalwart

MYNO CONSULTING, a development-based network management software provider, has recently secured a landmark order from the Philippine Information Industry Association (PIIA).

The Manila, Metro Manila, is considered to be a technology outsourcing stalwart, having held the company from selling more than a dozen to see the Internet to communities with limited access.

From providing simple graphic designs, Padilla grew by converting time into a full-fledged web design and development company targeting specifically small accounting applications.

Myno Consulting also provides social media management services (SMM) that allows clients to maintain multiple social media profiles. Eventually, the company has developed the OFW which Android Mobile Applications services—as much for OFWs to connect themselves and provide them the support, it is help each other.

Also, Myno developed a CRM that provides their clients and programmers to develop a CRM (CRM).

As for growth, the office has been in Manila for more than a decade. However, Padilla, who has selected a lot of his own technology entrepreneur. In reality, Myno is one of the few companies who only placed open technology in a manner to develop a business.

Even in being an established business owner, Myno was once an ordinary Filipino worker—a domestic helper, to be exact.

Myno grew up in a poor fishing village in Laguna, Philippines. He used to swim daily in open sea to gather seaweeds and vegetables to eat. The money he earned would be used to buy food for his family. She has been working as a very young age but turned to services and help her family.

"I was never stop but my family and I learned how to survive. But I thought that we shouldn't be living like this in the control of our lives. I knew that only by earning money could we ever change our lives," says Myno during the PIIA South General Membership Meeting last December, where his company was also officially introduced to members.

"I thought back home how difficult life was for domestic helpers working abroad, that they would not have wanted to leave, but the other domestic helpers also understood that living home was not an option. They had to be up with all the hardships," she says.

Inspired by what she learned from the appealing union of her fellow helpers, Padilla set out in 2000 to establish the Malaysian Hong Kong Workers' Federation, which helped domestic workers in Hong Kong.

At the time, she learned how to use the Internet, utilizing technology to connect with her family back home and teaching the same to her fellow helpers.

"I was blessed to have been taught how to use the Internet. I changed a lot of things in my life and I used it as a great tool to help me, especially my children," says Myno.

After that, Myno has continued to learn more about the Internet for a variety of purposes. She was able to put up with her life, she found that the best way to survive was to join a workers' federation. She found that the best way to survive was to join a workers' federation.

Because of her work, both for OFWs and her software development, she wanted to be a significant addition to several social responsibilities. One of these is the OFW's Mission, a livelihood training program for returning OFWs. She was also named as the first global ambassador of the Philippine Information Industry Association.

Padilla continues her work as an advocate for social change among OFWs, connecting her with a lot of people in the Philippine IT sector, through their mobile phones if they do not have their own computers.

"I am also a very passionate supporter of our technology education. By using social media, we'll be able to link together OFWs and help them wherever we can. This is about how to be able to help the people who are in the business and public of service."

FOR THIS special show that pays tribute to Katerina Piliaga, Lito Perez, president of the 35-year-old Fashion Designers Association of the Philippines, brings back the high-style luxury of barong. Tagging on worn by the elite ilustrado class in the Spanish era.

"They were men of cosmopolitan style," says Perez of Camp Sili, "who traveled frequently abroad, usually in Europe, and were up-to-date on the latest in menswear and mode grooming."

True, the "new" look of Perez's barong designs reflects rising continental influences.

"It's inspired by the early influences the Europeans introduced when at the time of the colony. The idea is to give the barong a dignified appearance, and the fabric is rich and elegant," says Perez.

To counterbalance his collection, Perez brings the barong down to the body and uses colorful shades of pinla embellished with embroidery and beading, for a subtle touch of barong.

On a yellow pinla with subtle silk thread embroidery at the collar, Perez uses a touch of subtle gold beading on the collar and on the sleeves, between the collar.

The perfect setting for the vintage-inspired collection is the historical town of Pila, Laguna, famous for its grand period houses, according to Philippine historian

Dr. Luciano Ilanaga. Pila is the only town in the country that is historically recognized as an important historical site by the Commission on History.

In 2003, the National Historical Institute of the Philippines declared the town place of Pila and its surrounding natural beauty a historical landmark. The town has 35 well-preserved, large of the century structures, of which 28 are ancestral.

In 2003, the House of San Pablo proclaimed the parish church of San Antonio de Buena Vista de Pila as the ancestral shrine of St. Anthony. It is the first ancestral shrine in the Philippines and was built by the first mission who arrived in Pila in 1578 in Spanish Colonial style.

This show was done in the old Manila's original Ancestral barong house in Pila and built, and in the Manila's history of the century ancestral house.

The ancient audience agrees, more the deep devotion, the deeper the depth of personal self-knowledge. It is this that is the reward for reverence from childhood's Sunday church service.

The congregation's early circumciser supports coexistence in raw and rare support as gleeful southern birds and follows up above the traditionalism against' sides, proclaiming papal passage and pride in their's sacred and such-based soul.

Here is a set of seven color tones that together all in summary make the known, the black, the blonde—or building tones—each tone is vibrant with a vital force to urge an undiminished story of chromatic choice and creativity.

Abstract The purpose of this study was to determine whether there were differences in the prevalence of risk factors for coronary artery disease between men who had been exposed to asbestos and those who had not. A case-control study was conducted among men aged 60 years or older who had been employed in asbestos-related occupations. The results showed that the prevalence of risk factors for coronary artery disease was significantly higher in the exposed group than in the non-exposed group.

ESTEBAN: "I never thought I would be president of a major American university. The one thing I can control is how many basketball fans I can bring." —A. Gabriel Esteban

A. Gabriel Esteban—the first Filipino (and lay) president of a major American university

Seton Hall 'being a Catholic university where basketball is probably the most popular sport alongside baseball is a dream come true for a Filipino-basketball and church'

By Charles Y. Hwang

AMADO GABRIEL Esteban made news when he was named president of Seton Hall University in early 2011. He was the first Filipino to become president of a major American university and Seton Hall's first lay president in decades, and only third in the Catholic institution's 155-year history.

The news reached home to quite the Esteban making it an "Open" or "Mama" Pasigano after winning yet another basketball crown, but enough to generate a few e-mails from balikbayans. Some were asking for jobs, others for advice on the career, Esteban replied in amusement.

"Do you can imagine if I had won the lottery," said Esteban, 56, a self-proclaimed man with the same and many measures of one's favorite uncle. He and his wife, Josephine, were guests of honor at the Malacañan last week hosted by Philippine Ambassador to the US Jose Carlos Jr., and attended by top senators and Philippine university presidents. (Esteban attended Esteban's ceremony.)

"I tried to be respectful and replied I is do a small," Esteban said.

Meritocratic

If these balikbayans knew him at all, they wouldn't have even asked. The meritocratic Esteban is against unfair advantages. Hard work is his motto.

"I found out a long time ago that to be a leader and a manager, you have to be fair to people," he said. "Once people find that they can trust the system, then they'll give the system. That's the major problem I see going on in corporations and even in our country, people try to gain unfair advantages. While it shouldn't be merely black and white with your regulations, if you're going into a game area, there should be a strong foundation. That's one rule you have to bring in public higher education in the US. Don't do anything unless you're perfectly comfortable that it's not going to be in the next day's paper. I tend to be very transparent."

His interest in hiring people based on merit and absolute objection to getting ahead using one's personal connections is significant in Filipino culture, where it's an unspoken rule to elect officials to appoint relatives to key positions.

"I've heard to hear people you can't trust. But that works both ways," Esteban said. "You have to be able to trust that they'll watch your back. But watching your back means they're going to be on the up and up when it comes to their decision making. I can see that happening in our country. There in the US, they hire (hires) if they have the skills. But if they don't have the skills, then you're questioning the money."

Career path

Born and raised in Manila, Esteban studied music and earned his MBA at the University of the Philippines, effectively achieving what everyone thought would be his career path to become a medical doctor like his father, who taught at De La Salle and UP College of Medicine (his siblings both became doctors).

It was at UP when he met Josephine King, a business economics major who, like him, was Catholic schoolboy (he, at Fero Catholic School, where his mother taught history; she, at St. Mary's College, where she sang in the glee club). Self-described geeks, they met in the math club.

Esteban went on to earn a scholarship that brought him to Harvard's Chanin School University for his second master's degree, in Japanese business studies, before coming home briefly to work as an investment analyst at Asia Mutual Corp. The business moved to the US in 1986, where Josephine was offered an opportunity to earn an MBA at the University of California, Riverside. He also won a fellowship to get a PhD in business administration at University of California, Irvine.

With their young daughter Gabriela in tow, the family moved to Texas where Es-more ways of having fun in the Philippines.

And the best part is that having fun in our country is not hard at all. On Jan. 22, Lady Perry gave the concert season going with her "California Dreams" tour, presented by Inara, at the old Ball of Asia Grand Cinema.

Tickets available at Ticket World — at www.ticketworld.com.ph or tel. 801-8880 or direct at J&P's website, www.jandp.com.ph.

My guess is that Perry will certainly sing her hit, "Firework," as it is the night for the season. Sponsors include Inara, Philippine Airlines, LBS Asia, Little Asia, Pina, Star World and J&P Mall of Asia.

300 houses

As we seek ways to have fun in our country, it's not enough to make it another day everyone to have more fun. We can even have fun while helping others.

Habitat for Humanity Philippines (HHP) is launching their South Build 2012 on Jan. 14, 4 p.m., at the Greenhill 5 Habitat Walk, building on the success of last year's South Build, the HHP South Council is supporting the development of 200 new houses and giving 2,000 volunteers to build 200 houses in Negros, Marikina City, on May 12.

It's a challenging goal, but when we consider that 1919 people have lost their homes in the Philippines, it's the best of goals that we all want to help achieve. The South Council supports a large contingent of 200 people from South Build, joined by their peers from around the region. South Build is an Asia Pacific-wide endeavor, with similar work planned in China, India, Indonesia and Thailand.

Alan Espinoza, Habitat Asia Executive and HHP South Council member, is particularly excited about the 200 people from South Build, joined by their peers from around the region. South Build is an Asia Pacific-wide endeavor, with similar work planned in China, India, Indonesia and Thailand.

Tilda Swinton thought ...

involved in our party politics, I haven't been really involved in any kind of political action mainly because I don't see it described in my family and work.

My children have my kind of political ideology. I am very much involved in their education. My children go to a Waldorf Steiner School. I am very involved in trying to build a curriculum program for the school so that they can see the value of education as they go to school. It's about as political as my life becomes.

Thinking about that, for me, art is political. I can't really imagine it not being political. But beyond that, there's nothing really political about being political. I would say that in the (highlands of Scotland), it actually is quite possible,

'One of the really delightful things about performing is that you get to act out things that are very far from yourself' particularly if you have young children.

It's deeply political when you put your children into a Waldorf School. I'm very proud of my school and that particular education. It would be nice for my family and my children. It's an alternative education which takes into account values, a child developing at his own rate and developing a really creative attitude to the world, and a feeling of social responsibility. No education, advertising, no politics. They are great.

Would you say that this role is the most complex you've played?

I certainly feel a complexity with this project. This is the fourth one. I have a job with a friend of mine that we're going to bring out a book on called "The Motherhood" with these four films of mothers. "The Grey Lady," "Julia," "I Am Love," and this film which are all looking at this period, sort of being a mother. It's very interesting in this regard. But only because I'm a mother too. I think mostly because I have a mother. I'm a child of a mother, so we all are.

This film does feel like a companion for me, and I developed it alongside Lavinia Kater for quite a few years. It was a very difficult film to get made because you can't imagine people really giving you money to make another like this. So the last that we've made is really unique.
